Leisurely pursuing the day's wire copy from Associated Press, we came upon the notice that there are now 158 days left in the year. Or putting it another way, 207 days of the year have already passed us by. Probably the more pleasant and optimistic view is that there are 158 wonderful days left in 1965. And yet, that is not so many days since it seems such a short time ago that the year started.

Just in the past few days we have experienced the kind of real summer heat to which the past has accustomed us. A lot of things change in this world of ours but some things seem to remain always the same. Children really know how to enjoy summer, probably because they can adjust physically to the heat much easier than their elders. A friend recently remarked how nice it was to be living in a university city. There is no university in the town in which he lives and he notices the great absence of young people there. The presence of young people, he said, adds an intangible vitality to a community that is important to it.

We tend to think of a university in terms of an economic unit. So many students means so many faculty members spending so much money on goods and services in the community. And of course, the students themselves must spend money to live away from home.

Maybe, however, we are getting more than we ever realize out of our student population. They contribute something to the atmosphere in which we live. They have not become bogged down in the old ways of doing things but are constantly alert to new ways and new concepts. As a result, we are motivated to be a little more alert, a little more alive ourselves.

Without young people and without children it would be a most dreary world. In the summer the children are fascinating in their endurance and ingenuity. The temperature might be riding in the nineties but the children can still pump their bikes uphill at a pretty good clip. They arrive at the top only to coast back down and make the climb all over again. And the remarkable thing is that they are never out of breath or freely perspiring. Something new on the scene is the skate board and the children can pump along on a board with the greatest of ease. They have the balance of a tight rope walker, the stamina of a sturdy oak and know no fear. A broken leg or arm might be a possible result but such a thought could not concern them less.

But despite their ready adjustment to the heat, the children do get hot now and then. But does it bother them? Not in the least. Somewhere, they can always find a sprinkler going and with Lincoln's cold water, a sprinkler can cool you off in a hurry. As a substitute, a good old water fight provides both a lively diversion and relief from the heat. And for young and old alike, there are such cooling refreshments as ice cream or ice cold watermelon. For something a little lighter and quicker, you might try a cold peach, orange or apple.

As you contemplate the few days left in the year, it might dawn on you that you are almost through another summer without having done many of the things you were sure you would be tackling this summer. You had good intentions of painting the window trim and the backyard fence but never seemed to find just the right moment for it.

With summer more than half gone, it will not be long until you have gotten clear through another season on the old paint job. That means you can amortize your original painting investment over another year, thus making it even more of a bargain than it ever was. In a sense, you are making money by stretching things further and doing so while conserving your own strength and energy.

In that light, the report on the number of days left in the year takes on much

Effort Worth Making

An encouraging note in the news a few days ago was the story to the effect that Sen. Terry Carpenter plans to make a try at reviving one of the much-needed pieces of welfare legislation—the bill to increase maximum payments in the Aid to Dependent Children program.

The statutory maximum payment is now so low that two-thirds of the families receiving ADC have a total income less than their minimum needs. A good many receive less than enough to pay for shelter and buy adequate food.

There was a lot of duscussion at the time the bill was killed about some reports of mothers on ADC who don't measure up to top standards as mothers. Such complaints lose sight of two things: such mothers are in the minority, and anyway there are other laws to remove children from unfit homes, set up guardianships for persons who cannot handle their money, etc.

lose sight of the fact that Aid to Depend- you would have thought it ent Children is just what it says it is-help for children who need help. There can't be any question but that we ought to provide for the minimum needs of children. They are the future, and help to them now-help to have the proper diet, reasonable clothing, a warm home in winter-will help them to stand tall and walk straight.

Under state law as amended by this legislature an aged couple may receive anti-Negro sentiment, and up to $220 in old age assistance. The increase in that maximum payment was a step forward. But unless the ADC maximum payments are raised a mother with 11 children will continue to receive only a maximum of $215—less for a family of 12 than for an elder family of two. No one in either category will get more than they need. Certainly the ceiling needs to be raised for the children.

Dr. Kraenzel, A Prophet

Dr. Karl Kraenzel is professor of agricultural economics and sociology at Montana State College. Some know him as the author of a book, "Great Plains in Transition." It was published 10 years ago.

He is probably the first to view the Great Plains as a region, and to advocate that it forget state lines and join in a regional effort for a place in the national sun.

He is the originator of the statement that Montana annually exports $127 million worth of education free to the rest of the nation. But it gets $140 million for its wheat Enlarge these figures and you have the story of Nebraska.

We don't blame the young people. Education is their way to a better life. If the Great Plains states do not provide the jobs to keep that trained talent at home it is the fault of the states. And that does not diminish the necessity for educating the

Dr. Kraenzel sees the region as an extractive one, exporting its raw material at a low figure, buying back the processed goods at a high figure. It is a can't win arrangement. This was one of the great factors in our fight for independence, but in this case we do not need warfare to break the pattern. We need a joint effort to change

Recently Dr. Kraenzel testified before a Senate Subcommittee in behalf of a Great Plains Commission. He envisions a body to carry on research on everything from weather control to product marketing. He would establish fellowships for graduate study in regional development. He advocates scenic highways and the establishment of local development districts.

Dr. Kraenzel is correct in one thing. Development is too big for any one state and it does need federal help. He represents a new kind of thinking that may break the fetters of this good section.

Paul A. M. Dirac (1902-.), professor of mathematics at Cambridge and one of the giants of 20th century physics, won the 1933 Nobel Prize in physics for his work in establishing the facts of atomic structure.

Dirac introduced the modern theory of spinning electrons. From pure mathematics he predicted the existence of atomic particles known as "positrons." Two years after his prediction that such particles exist. other scientists found them experimentally.

He was the first to conceive of the mysterious and puzzling thing called "antimatter.'

Anti-matter appears to have exactly the same properties as matter-at least it is indistinguishable from matter. But when combined with matter, it has an explosive effect many times more powerful than anything man community that is important to it.

We tend to think of a university in terms of an economic unit. So many students means so many faculty members spending so much money on goods and services in the community. And of course, the students themselves must spend money to live away from home.

Maybe, however, we are getting more than we ever realize out of our student population. They contribute something to the atmosphere in which we live. They have not become bogged down in the old ways of doing things but are constantly alert to new ways and new concepts. As a result, we are motivated to be a little more alert, a little more alive ourselves.

Without young people and without children it would be a most dreary world. In the summer the children are fascinating in their endurance and ingenuity. The temperature might be riding in the nineties but the children can still pump their bikes uphill at a pretty good clip. They arrive at the top only to coast back down and make the climb all over again. And the remarkable thing is that they are never out of breath or freely perspiring. Something new on the scene is the skate board and the children can pump along on a board with the greatest of ease. They have the balance of a tight rope walker, the stamina of a sturdy oak and know no fear. A broken leg or arm might be a possible result but such a thought could not concern them less. But despite their ready adjustment to the heat, the children do get hot now and then. But does it bother them? Not in the least. Somewhere, they can always find a sprinkler going and with Lincoln's cold water, a sprinkler can cool you off in a hurry.

As a substitute, a good old water fight provides both a lively diversion and relief from the heat. And for young and old alike, there are such cooling refreshments as ice cream or ice cold watermelon. For something a little lighter and quicker, you might try a cold peach, orange or apple.

As you contemplate the few days left in the year, it might dawn on you that you are almost through another summer without having done many of the things you were sure you would be tackling this summer. You had good intentions of painting the window trim and the backyard fence but never seemed to find just the right moment for it.

With summer more than half gone, it . will not be long until you have gotten clear through another season on the old paint job. That means you can amortize your original painting investment over another year, thus making it even more of a bargain than it ever was. In a sense, you are making money by stretching things further and doing so while conserving your own strength and energy.

In that light, the report on the number of days left in the year takes on much more meaning that was at first the case. Some Losses,

Perhaps you were go-ing to sink your hard earned cash into a Some Gains new lawn mower this year. But if you haven't already done so, you might want to contemplate the practicality of it in view of the fact that the grass should be in a fairly dormant state by now and the big end of the mowing is past. On the other side of the coin is the realization that time is growing short for some of the enjoyable pastimes of summer.

How have you done on getting out into the open this year so far? If you haven't watched the corn grow tall, you can still catch it as the ears grow plump. By now you have missed the swaying fields of golden wheat but the stubble remains and pastures show an unusually good growth. Woodlands are a deep and heavy green and wildlife is in abundance. There may be only 158 days left in the year but good times are in great promise for those who only seek them.

Under state law as amended by this legislature an aged couple may receive up to $220 in old age assistance. The in-

Anti-Johnson sentiment was strong in Mississippi at that time, even stronger than anti-Negro sentiment, and when you combined the two it made your car an object of derision, even danger.

It Takes Hard Knocks To Make One Know Himself

NEW YORK - "It's kind of important to keep losing to shock and disappointment," says Leroy Nieman. "You have to plunge into chaos occasionally, and get yourself completely beat up in the process. It's the way to stay alive.

"I mean, if life goes on beautifully all the time, you get not to really care about anything. But the emergency disasters, the bad stuff—you learn from it. Of course, you can't go out on the street and just expect to run into these things. You can't get disaster from people you love. You have to stick your neck out and ask for it."

Nieman smiled philosophi-cally. "We're living in a wonderful time for put-downs and set-backs, I must say. This animal-nature thing everybody's talking about is really here. It's all true. It's all good. It's downhill all the Leroy Nieman is an artist. Although he is a highly successful artist, it is unnecessary to add that he is unconventional. When he was a hungry artist, living in a basement and teaching at the Chicago Art Institute to earn money for paints and palettes, he found it easier to run into those little emergency disasters which he finds all-important to make one learn, feel and live.

"Times change. There were years when an artist had to be unaccepted in or-der to be great. Today it is almost necessary for an ar-really good. "This is because everything today is put into words, Eyerything is talked over, thoroughly, of TV interviews and panel shows. After an artist becomes successful, he goes on a panel show and talks about his work. In talking about it, he learns to understand what he is doing.

"But if he's not successful, he isn't invited to talk on panel shows. In fact, no one will listen to him. So never knows exactly what he's doing, and cannot paint to his best abilities."

Besides roving the world on a lavish expense account, for Playboy, Nieman sells his paintings through chic galleries such as the Hammer Gallery in New York and the Salon D'Arte Mod-erne in Paris. He has a "not unbeautiful" life, and a wife, but he "can't go respectable, because I don't believe in it. It is not interesting to be 'respectable.' " And in these times, it is not easy, either.

There are no taboos anymc.e. The discotheque may be symbolic of the trend. In a discotheque, the crowds and noise and frenzy are so great you have the feeling the lid can blow off any minute. Old people, who once lived in quiet clothes and lived in quiet clothes and wisdom, now submit to the indignity of trying to look young; they are varicose veins in shorts and pot bellies. In art, the pornegraphy movement is on its way, and when it comes the world will accept it. It's a circus we live in, a curiosity. And it's not going to slow down.

Profiles In Science

Paul A. M. Dirac (1902), professor of mathematics at Cambridge and one of the giants of 20th century physics, won the 1933 Nobel Prize in physics for his work in establishing the facts of atomic structure.

Dirac introduced the modern theory of spinning electrons. From pure mathematics he predicted the exist-ence of atomic particles known as "positrons." Two years after his prediction that such particles exist, other scientists found them experimentally.

He was the first to con-

Anti-matter appears to have exactly the same properties as matter—at least it is indistinguishable from matter. But when combined with matter, it has an explosive effect many times more powerful than anything man

Dirac also has proposed the existence of elementary particles of magnetism, which have been named "magnetic monopoles." Unlike positrons, monopoles have not yet been actually discovered but scientists are sure they eventually will be. No reason why they should not exist has been found. Therefore, it is reasoned. they must exist.

While Dirac was a student at Cambridge he was influenced by a lecture given by the famed physicist, Wernher Heisenberg, who discussed the theories of quantum

NASON ON EDUCATION

Spoken Word Relates To Reading

By LESLIE J. NASON Equal access to books and libraries does not automatically provide equal opportunity to learn!

Large numbers of children use what is almost a different language than that found in books. The English spoken in their homes and communities is incorrect according to school standards. The language of education is somewhat foreign to them. They are not prepared to read newspapers, magazines or books.

Add to this the matter of prejudice and the students have a double problem. This is the view of the Educational Policies Commission, which has put out a booklet, "American Education and the Search for Equal Oppor-

It was the task of the 19member commission to supply the best of educational thinking on major issues. They commend the present emphasis on nursery schools to help the disadvantaged child in building a background for reading so that he can have a fair start in the regular elementary school program.

If a child lives in an environment that speaks a brand of incorrect English according to the standards of accepted writing, his disadvantage becomes greater as he grows older.

A recent letter from a June graduate says her high school grades were sufficient to gain her college admission. But her letter states, ". . . I still don't think I'm ready for college. glish is always spoken and written. This is also true in my community. Yet, I managed to achieve well in

This girl is willing and anxious to prepare herself for college work. But no school-sponsored program is available to her. * * *

The Policies Commission was not specific in suggesting a solution to problems of this type. Too many young people face the same baffling problem.

What these students need are programs similar to students. These include English taught as a foreign language and opportunities for conversation with individuals who speak the language correctly. This might be accomplished through summer camps or year-round pro-grams in which they are taken out of their community environments and placed in one in which only correct English is allowed to be spoken.

Changing speech habits requires long concentrated effort. Evening classes, discussion groups, and reading of good books could also aid the student who has the necessary desire and willingness to work.

For example, a 38-year-old housewife and mother of three in Cocoa Beach, Fla., complained, "He's terrible about discipline. I correct the children and he takes their part." But across the country in Robbins, Calif., a 34-year-old young executive weighed in with, "I'm strict with the kids when I'm home. But when I go to work, all the good is undone. She sympathizes with them against me.

In Chattanooga, Tenn., a 27-year-old factory maintenance man swore a little and then said, "We fight about money matters. She keeps putting us in debt for things we can't afford." Of course, not all is sound and fury. Our in-depth surveyors also found some sweetness and light. A Hamden. Conn., lawyer's wife admitted, "We argue over who has to get up with the baby. Neither of us likes to get up with him. The 'Big One' is really a very good husband,

Dogs Do Train

Miami, Fla. (A)-No woman ever kept closer check on her weight than greyhound trainers keep on their dogs. Some trainers weigh their dogs daily, and if one starts adding weight, his food supply is cut to keep him at racing weight. Young greyhounds are fed four or five times a day and pups start running free in large pens at about five months of age. A couple of months later they are broken to lead and at eight or nine months are chasing rabbits, then broken to the starting box and begin track training at the farm. At about 15 months, they are ready to race at tracks. A racing greyhound is fed once a day, his meal consisting of horse meat, biscuit and meal with vitamins added.

The bride fashioned her wedding gown of Irish linen which was designed in the Empire mode. The bell-sleeved bodice had a portrait neckline and was patterned with minute orange blossoms. A circlet of orange blossoms held in place her floor-length veil and she carried a green gardenia which was fashioned of lemon leaves.

After Aug. 1, Mr. Huber and his bride will reside at Endwell, N.Y.

The bride attended Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., and was graduated in June from Washington University, in St. Louis, where she majored in fashion design, and where she is a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.
